Introduction

This list owes a great deal to the work of Eric Bush, Alan Leonard and the late Jack Foley and others who have compiled, contributed and edited it for many years. With them lies the credit.

We now have the power of the web at our finger-tips, please visit www.fgo-stuart.co.uk to see many of Stuart's cards and other research relating to his life and work. This checklist will be made available there and updated periodically as necessary.

F.G.O Stuart

F.G.O Stuart's postcards continue to be popular with collectors nearly a century after his death. They depict an England and a way of life now lost to us, and one that, seen through the rose-tinted spectacles of today, seems idyllic in our modern world.

Francis Godolphin Osbourne Stuart was born in Scotland in 1843, moving to London in about 1872 to set himself up in business as a photographer. In about 1882, for unknown reasons, Stuart moved to Southampton, first to premises in Bedford Place and later to Cromwell Road where he was based for the rest of his life. From about 1901 Stuart began publishing postcards, drawing upon his library of images. His first postcards were printed in Britain but from about 1903 he began to use German publishers, then world leaders in lithographic printing. Stuart published some 2,500 cards in total, the majority numbered so that they continue to appeal to collectors today.

Stuart died in 1923, the business continuing until the late thirties under the management of his daughter and son-in-law when it finally appears to have wound up, perhaps due to the combined effects of the decline in popularity of the postcard, the First World War and the economic depression of the late twenties and thirties.

Framed Series (12 cards)

In common with other publishers, Stuart produced this run of 'framed' cards, a design popular for a time. These differ from most of Stuart's other cards in that they are gelatin glazed.

Unnumbered Series (230 cards)

Stuart produced many un-numbered cards, both in undivided and, later, divided back varieties. Many of the scenes repeat views from the main series, both topographical and nautical. Stuart also produced a number of commercial cards for use by local businesses such as hotels etc. It also may be that his images were used by other publishers with no visible credit to Stuart. We know for example that he produced several scenes for Southampton based publisher John Adams. It is the very nature of these cards (the variety and the fact that they were un-numbered) which makes it very difficult to know the extent of them. Previously unknown cards still turn up today.
